

Management Plan Reflection-Standard 5 Community of Learners

After several days visiting my practicum classroom, I felt that I had a strong awareness of student' behaviour and I was on my way to a developing a successful management plan.

However, what I found was that I was using the current management plan while adjusting to students; where as my sponsor teacher taught students to respond to her management strategies.

What I learned from this experience was that it is very important to set expectations early and there are many resources that can help students learn basic classroom rules. I have also learned that it is very important to remind students of classroom rules especially when students are becoming disruptive.

And finally, if students are apart of making classroom management plans they are more responsive to following through with expectations. At the end of the day, students need to be aware of jobs they need to accomplish and what acceptable behaviour in the classroom looks like.
